Our speaker today is an award winning speaker. She is the founder and president of Presenting Matters, a business presentation consulting firm. She has worked with high level executives, international speakers, along with other organizations and individuals who want to clarify their message and perfect their delivery. She is a professional speaker, corporate communications consultant, and speech and presentation coach. She has worked with Monster.com in the Making It Count program and her articles have recently been published internationally.

Recently named the High Impact Emerging Professional Speaker, she started out as an actress at a young age. She carried her passion to the college, where she was a Theatre major. After gaining extra training at the University of London, she tried her hand at New York. Once she realized the term “starving actor” was to be taken literally, she came back home.

She began her business when she discovered she could bring her acting background into the business world. She considers herself very fortunate to do what she loves.
